The motives for writing autobiographies are various. Sometimes as we have seen, the writer is tempted by a big cheque. In other cases he or she is conscious of having had an interesting life, and wishes the public to share the interest. Some men - especially Deans I regret to say are raconteurs, and so fond of their own stories that they may perish without them. The relief of the raconteur's family when the fifty times told tale is at last fixed in black and white and presumably done with, must be immense. Others have a grievance and wish posterity to know why they were elbowed out of office, who was really responsible for the miscarriage of a military expedition, who was the real author of a literary or scientific discovery and so on, Classical scholars have admired the dignity of Thucydides in not giving his own story of the reverse at Amphipolis where he was a commander. Others again have left memoirs which they intended or hoped would be published after their deaths, and in which they have inserted as much venom as they could, conscious that they themselves will not be able to be called to account, nor perhaps their victims to vindicate their reputation. Sometimes the autobiography seems to be prompted by sheer vanity. Vanity unlike pride is a rather amiable foible, a vain man is seldom unpopular, partly because he shows that he cares for the good opinions of others. As an autobiographer he fails by telling too many lies.
- d) Expand one of the following: [1×5=5]
- i) Further favours the brave.
ii) Charity begins at home.
iii) Early to bed, early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise.
